Travels and covid

Covid-19 cases continue to surge up and down yet...

-Management is not making an effort to inform employees that they may have been in contact with a covid positive customer or employee, and when they do, it's days after they are informed.

-Management is not making attempt to limit travels, putting employees and customers, as well as their families at greater risk than necessary.

In a recent correspondence, Michael Mullan stated: "The answer is not limiting travel but getting vaccinated to reduce the risk of infection, or the impact of Covid if someone is unfortunate enough to catch the virus."

Management in HQ rarely must travel, enclosed in the safety of their offices with much less risk than traveling instructors.

Limiting travels is something the company can easily do and would greatly reduce the chances of encountering a covid positive individual, especially on crowded trains.

So, why isn't management doing everything possible to limit the spread of covid in Berlitz?

The simple answer is: They only care about the money.
